University students stand in solidarity with school climate strike

The National Union of Students (NUS) supports the school climate strike that has been called for the 15th of March in cities and towns all over Australia. We support the call for politicians to stop the Adani coal mine, for no new coal and gas power, and for 100% renewable energy in Australia by 2030. NUS will be encouraging all university and TAFE students across Australia to attend the strike in solidarity with the school students this week on the 15th of March.

“We know that climate change is one of the biggest issue that our world is facing, and these students have shown that young people will no longer stand for the environmental neglect of the past decades.” said NUS National President Desiree Cai

“Next week, the National Union of Students, post-secondary university and vocational education students will be standing in solidarity with these school students as they lead positive change for all of our futures.” said Ms Cai

University students are encouraged to attend university student contingents to the school strike in all major cities.
